YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD

This guide will highlight some simple tips to help you raise a puppy that is ready for the sounds, sights, and scents of your neighborhood

Raising a puppy in your neighborhood can have unique challenges compared to raising a pup in the country where the environment is quieter and very different.

Is your puppy scared of huge, noisy and intrusive trash trucks? Fireworks? Barking out your car window because something frightens her? Are you scared to expose your precious puppy to other dogs prior to being fully vaccinated? This is understandable and there is a safe solution.

Please don't wait until your puppy is past their 3.5 month "Critical Socialization Period" I train many 4-5 month old pups with behavioral problems already established due lack of early, safe socialization and training. We offer a fenced and beautiful area to socialize young puppies with our healthy social group of dogs of all ages and breeds. We have other safe socialization techniques as well!

POSITIVE EXPOSURE & SOCIALIZATION

This can't be emphasized enough: Introducing your puppy to the world in a positive way while they're very young is crucial for a happy, well-rounded adult dog in the future. Lack of socialization during the critical "imprint period/critical socialization period" can lead to a higher chance of stressful behavioral issues when the puppy becomes an adolescent and adult.

Dogs learn in two ways - by association/emotion and by consequence/doing. Because of these two learning styles, dogs see the world in two ways: what is safe/good for me verses what is dangerous/bad.

For all socialization and proactive exposure training, take everything slow and let your puppy guide the pace. Keep socialization practice short and sweet, and start new exposure low and slow. Learn all you can about puppy & dog body language and become a student of your pup's signals.

DITCH THE BOWL

Mental stimulation is just as important as physical exercise for both puppies and adult dogs. Your pup will use up mental energy and enjoy their food even more when having to work for it. Instead of feeding them right out of the bowl, take a portion of their food to use as a training opportunity and put the remainder in an interactive feeder. As your puppy works on their enrichment project you can take some time to catch up on your to do list:)

Many people think if you want to tire a puppy, you only have to give them exercise. Exercise and play are extremely important, but mental and emotional growth are imperative as well.

Every pet parent can ditch the bowl with the exception of those who are having to put medication in the food or a senior dog with possibly this and other special needs. Implementing learning and training activities into your daily routine makes it easier and more productive for all. Another great benefit for puppies who are teething and have sore gums, is chewing. Especially chewing on a frozen toy stuffed with part of their meal. This helps relieve their gum inflammation as well their need to chew.

POTTY TRAINING

Potty Training can have it's challenges, but hopefully with a few helpful tips we can help minimize those challenges.

First, choose the place you would like to train your puppy to go potty, either outside or inside. If inside, a grass patch such as Doggie Lawn, which can be delivered to your door, is an option for some people.

Locating a quiet space in the house to put the grass patch where there isn't a lot of foot traffic, will help your puppy relax and potty in peace. Upon bringing your puppy to this location, encourage exploration in positive ways. Engaging in a brief game of fetch may also get their bladder moving. To teach your puppy go potty on cue, name the action while they are going potty. Say the cue quietly as to not interrupt. Wait until they are done, then praise and follow up with their favorite treat. It's fun and rewarding to create positive associations during training.

It is not uncommon for a puppy to slightly miss the potty area; you will still want to reward your puppy for any effort around the potty station to encourage and motivate. Keep wipes handy just in case. Also, by immediately cleaning up feces, this will prevent your puppy from further exploration.

Supervising your dog at all times; tethering or confinement tools like a crate and exercise pen will help you keep an eye on your pup and proactively watch for their potty signals. Some puppies spin or sniff as a sign they may need to use the bathroom and some just... do it in an instant!! Set a timer for every hour at first to bring your puppy to the potty station. Also puppies need to relieve themselves upon rising from sleep, after eating and drinking, playing and before bed. Keeping your pup leashed will not only prevent accidents, but guide them to the potty spot and keep them there until they have gone.

New behaviors take time and by continuing the above... well past the time you think they understand, will pay many dividends. With management and consistency your pup will be trained to go potty the correct way.

Benefits of Good

MANAGEMENT

The benefits of good management are numerous!! Managing a situation rather than trying to change your dog's behavior is sometimes the easiest answer to a behavior problem for both you and your dog.

An example of using management is removing important and dangerous objects that your puppy might want to explore...always with their teeth! Removing tempting food from the kitchen counter is also a great example of using management. Prevention and setting your new family member up for success is the way to go.

One of the main purposes of crate training your puppy is to prevent them from getting into trouble or harming themselves. It can also help puppies with bladder and impulse control.

Examples of management: exercise pen, baby gate, muzzle, leash, window covering and crates.

As a new puppy parent, it's important to know and recognize dog's body language and their calming signals. Recognizing a calming signal is the best way to help de-escalate a situation for your puppy before they become even more uncomfortable.

A Puppy uses calming signals to say "I'm stressed out, can we go now?"

Calming signals are meant to clearly communicate meaning; unfortunately some parents miss their puppy's cry for help until it escalates into something more vocal. Some signals can serve as a stress release, such as the shake off.

EXAMPLES OF CALMING SIGNALS

- Lip Licking
- Shake off
- Paw lift
- Stretching
- Look Away
- Pacing
- Sniffing
- Scratching
- Big Yawn
- Blinking
- Lowering the tail
- Sneezing

MEANING

All dogs should have a safe place, such as a crate or mat that they can go to when they want to be left alone.

LEARNING TO TALK DOG

Dogs learn by performing behaviors that result in something pleasant. The more often the dog performs a behavior that results in something pleasant, the more likely they are to repeat that behavior.

Sometimes simply ignoring or not reinforcing a particular behavior with your attention may extinguish some unwanted behaviors.

The investment you make giving your puppy a good learning foundation will pay off throughout their life.

THE LEARNING PROCESS

Positive reinforcement training is based on the principles of classical conditioning; Pavlov's dogs salivated at the sound of a bell because they had learned to associate the bell with food, and operant conditioning; Skinner's pigeons performed a series of movements in order to receive food.

Capturing involves waiting for your dog to perform a behavior that you wish to strengthen. The moment your puppy performs the desired behavior without incentive, mark (praise) and reward your puppy. For example, if you wanted to teach your dog to lie down using capturing, you would wait until he chooses to lie down, then mark and reward.

Consistency in Training - In order for your pup to clearly understand what you expect, training must be clear and consistent. This also means that the whole household needs to be on the same page.

Reinforcement - The timing, strength, and type of reinforcement used to communicate with your dog is critical to the outcome of what your dog learns. A behavior is strengthened when a reinforcement occurs every time.

The younger the puppy is, the shorter the attention span. Shorter, more frequent training sessions throughout the day are ideal. My sessions last full term because I am there for the pet parents and family, not just the pup.

- Say Please- Teach your puppy to sit for anything they want.
- Follow- Introduction of recall (come when called)
- Trade- Your puppy dropping what's in their mouth for another option, is a great way to teach "Let Go".

To Do

Description

Potty Training

Puppies need schedules for success: mealtime, rest, play, train and potty times. Consistently lead to the potty spot, say "Go potty" and reward!

Meal Time & Training

Feed by hand, interactive feeder, training session, or use meal time to help with a positive socialization experience.

Exercise/ Play/ Socialization

Human play, fetch, tug, walk, positive social and other exposure experiences

Alone Time

Give your puppy something special such as a Kong or a chew, when your are ready to leave. Add 15 min weekly

Is your cute, adorable puppy driving you crazy? I would love to help take away the stress that comes with raising a puppy. You can have peace of mind and know you are making the right decisions every step of the way.
